Village, churches, water, parkland

In Brief

This is a glorious walk, full of variety, with a fine village at the start and a good pub at the high point. It also passes close to two of the most interesting and ancient churches in Surrey. Sensible shoes and shorts can be worn and dogs are welcome. [2017: the William IV pub was up for sale and was not serving food Mon or Tue.]

The walk begins in the main car park in Shere Village, off the A25, postcode GU5 9HE. For more details see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

- 1 Coming out of the car park, turn left and immediately right along Middle Street, going past the shops and teahouses that make Shere so attractive to visitors. At the little green, turn left to visit the church which is a must-see. Shere's ancient church of St James is a delightful essay in all that is best in an English country church: its location, its twelfth-century tower visible from the hills around and its interior with too many features to do justice to here. After visiting the church, retrace your steps, cross over Middle Street and continue ahead along Lower Street following the Tillingbourne stream with white ducks and probably lots of children and families. Pass the Old Forge and other quaint properties, a scarecrow and flowerpot men. At the next junction, go over a ford on the right by means of the footbridge.
- 2 Soon, at a junction of drives, take a narrow footpath half left between houses and follow it for some distance. It crosses a drive, goes up through a kissing gate and crosses an open meadow with the garden buildings and orchard of the Albury Estate on your left and fine views of the North Downs on your right. It then runs through a large bluebell wood, with a kissing-gate on each side, and reaches another open area. A church tower comes into view. This church was built by Henry Drummond, owner of Albury Manor, who was one of the new "apostles" of the Catholic Apostolic Church. Because of their belief in the second coming of Christ, the unused church is still kept in immaculate condition. Keeping the church on your left, pass through a gate and go down a track to the road.
- 3 Turn left along the road on a sheltered footpath, past the church and over a bridge over the Tillingbourne, continuing until eventually you reach a road junction. Turn left here following a sign to Albury Heath. But immediately turn left again through a wooden gate of Albury Park (note the weight in the drainpipe). Follow the driveway for 300 metres, and take the left fork, following the sign for the church. Shortly after, keep ahead across the grass, to reach the entrance to the ancient church.

Albury Church of St Peter and St Paul was mentioned in the Domesday Book in 1086. The Norman tower was built in 1140 and the "new" aisle in 1310. A certain William Oughtred, mathematician, credited with the invention of the sliderule and the "x" multiplication symbol, and tutor to Christopher Wren, was rector here for 50 years. The church stood in the centre of Albury until the gradual forced relocation of the village from 1782 by the estate owners William Clement Finch and Charles Wall. The new owner Henry Drummond (see above) commissioned Augustus Pugin, architect of the current Houses of Parliament, to design the Mortuary Chapel (ahead to the left as you enter).

Albury Park is a historic country house with grounds laid out by John Evelyn. All the chimneys of the house are of a different design. The grounds are open to the public only during Open House week.

- 4 After visiting the church, go back the way you came, but only about 50m to meet the first dirt track. Turn left here up a gentle grassy slope, crossing the tarmac drive that leads to Albury Park, and go past a fingerpost that points your way ahead. You can also see a wooden gate ahead leading into woods. Go through this gate on a footpath that leads up through a plantation of rhododendrons and bears left on a wide path. Keep to the path for some distance, going over several crossing paths. At a little triangle of birches, keep left. The ever-changing woodland is sometimes pine and sometimes deciduous. Eventually your path crosses a track and later passes through a gate by a modern house and continues to the main road at Little London. At the point where you meet the road, take a look here at the three footpath signs. The middle sign (at the time of writing, 2011, missing its “finger”) points your way back to Shere. You need to come back to here if you want refreshment first. (There are excellent pubs in Shere too.)

The next section [\[5\]](#) is an extra little optional circuit, very highly recommended, giving you the opportunity for refreshment and a look at Albury Heath. If you prefer to return to quickly to Shere, skip to section [\[6\]](#).

- [\[5\]](#) For the pub, take the dusty track on the other side of the road. This reaches another road after 300 metres and immediately on your right is the William IV. This is a lively village local which sometimes does a roast on Sundays in the winter and offers two excellent Surrey Hills brews. It is open all day Saturday and Sunday. [2017: the William IV was up for sale and was not serving food Mon or Tue.] To return in a circular route, go right through the back of the pub (note the gentlemen’s “stand-up” and “sit-down”) and its car park and out over a stile to a small meadow and join a track at the other side, via another stile. The track crosses over drives and meets Albury Heath. Turn right here on a wide track. On reaching the main road, turn right for 200m or so to the three signposts.
- [\[6\]](#) Following the middle signpost, through a wooden swing-gate, walk down a wonderful grass avenue with great chestnut trees (not all thriving unfortunately) standing like guards of honour, with good views ahead to the North Downs and with horses in the fields to your right. This leads all the way down to a gateway at the bottom, to the right of the path. Turn right here following the stream. This takes you across a grassy area and along a track with the stream always on your left, past the ford and back to the village. Turn left to pass the Dabbling Duck (a new café whose menu includes homemade fishcakes and burgers, toasted sandwiches, soups etc. and a range of cakes and pastries, which welcomes walkers, two and four-legged) and the shops and left at the T-junction back to the car park where the walk began. “Kingham’s”, on the right, with al fresco garden tables is an upmarket restaurant with an ambitious menu.
